We are accustomed to speak of the fish of the sea and the fowls of the air, but we rarely refer to the dwellers underground. And yet to many creatures the soil is their habitual home, just as the water is to fish, or the atmosphere to birds. If we removed them from it they would sicken or die. Nor is this underground habitation confined to particular kinds of animals. Both vertebrate and invertebrate creatures make it their home; and although the latter are more abundant, they are not more wonderfully adapted to their subterranean existence than the former. The soil, like the atmosphere and the sea, receives into its bosom as tenants animals of various classes. The wonderful modification of the finger-bones, covered with skin, which enables a bat to fly, is not a more striking adaptation of means to ends than the peculiar structure...
