Excerpt: .of commercial cities; and, fourthly, the augmentation of the price of articles of consumption, and further decline in that of the articles of our exports. Every prediction which they made has failed--utterly failed. It is now proposed to abolish the system to which we owe so much of the public prosperity. Why, sir, there is scarcely an interest--scarcely a vocation in society--which is not embraced by the beneficence of this system. The error of the opposite argument, is in assuming one thing, which, being denied, the whole fails; that is, it assumes that the whole labor of the United States would be profitably employed without manufactures. Now, the truth is, that the system excites and creates labor, and this labor creates wealth, and this new wealth communicates additional ability to consume; which acts on all the objects contributing to human comfort and enjoyment. I...
